

1 ELIZABETH B. WYDRA (BAR No. 218200)
2 BRIANNE J. GOROD
3 DAVID H. GANS
4 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCOUNTABILITY CENTER
5 1200 18th Street, NW, Suite 501
6 Washington, D.C. 20036
7 Tel.: (202) 296-6889
8 elizabeth@theusconstitution.org

9 Counsel for Amici Curiae Members of Congress

10 IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
11 FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA
12 SAN JOSE DIVISION

13 CITY OF SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA, et al.,

14 Plaintiffs,

15 v.

16 DONALD J. TRUMP, in his official capacity as
17 President of the United States, et al.,

18 Defendants.

19 -----
20 STATE OF CALIFORNIA, et al.,

21 Plaintiffs,

22 v.

23 DONALD J. TRUMP, in his official capacity as
24 President of the United States, et al.,

25 Defendants.

Case Nos. 5:20-cv-05167-LHK-RRC-EMC,
5:20-cv-05169-LHK-RRC-EMC

BRIEF OF AMICI CURIAE MEMBERS OF CONGRESS IN SUPPORT OF
PLAINTIFFS

Date: October 8, 2020

Time: 1:30 p.m.

Place: Courtroom 8, 4th Floor

Judge: Honorable Richard R. Clifton

Honorable Lucy H. Koh

Honorable Edward M. Chen

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

1

2

3 TABLE OF AUTHORITIES II

4 INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE 1

5 INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 1

6 ARGUMENT 4

7 I. The Constitution’s Founders Established Total Population as the Standard for

8 Apportioning Representatives to Congress in Order to Guarantee Equal

9 Representation for Equal Numbers of People..... 4

10 II. The Fourteenth Amendment Reaffirmed the Total Population Standard in

11 Order to Ensure Equal Representation for Equal Numbers of People..... 10

12 III. The President May Not Refuse to Count Persons Living in the United States

13 Simply Because of Their Immigration Status..... 16

14 CONCLUSION..... 18

15 APPENDIX..... 1A

16

17

18

19

20

21

22

23

24

25

26

27

28

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page(s)

CASES

Dep’t of Commerce v. U.S. House of Representatives,
525 U.S. 316 (1999) 7

Evenwel v. Abbott,
136 S. Ct. 1120 (2016) 3, 4, 10, 13, 17

Fed’n for Am. Immigration Reform v. Klutznick,
486 F. Supp. 564 (D.D.C. 1980) 2, 5, 17

Garza v. County of Los Angeles,
918 F.2d 763 (9th Cir. 1990)..... 5

Plyler v. Doe,
457 U.S. 202 (1982) 16, 17

Utah v. Evans,
536 U.S. 452 (2002) 6, 7, 8

Wesberry v. Sanders,
376 U.S. 1 (1964) 3

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND LEGISLATIVE MATERIALS

Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. (1865) 11

Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. (1866) passim

2 The Debates in the Several State Conventions on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution (Jonathan Elliot ed., 1836) 6

4 The Debates in the Several State Conventions on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution (Jonathan Elliot ed., 1836) 4

Memorandum on Excluding Illegal Aliens From the Apportionment Base Following the 2020 Census, 85 Fed. Reg. 44,679 (July 21, 2020) 2, 16

1 The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787 (Max Farrand ed., 1911) passim

2 The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787 (Max Farrand ed., 1911) 9, 10

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – cont’d

1		Page(s)
2
3
4	Report of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction at the First Session Thirty-Ninth Congress (1866)	11
5	U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 2	1, 10
6	U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 1	4
7	U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 3	1, 2, 4
8	U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4	5
9
10	BOOKS, ARTICLES, AND OTHER AUTHORITIES
11	Akhil Reed Amar, America’s Constitution: A Biography (2005).....	6, 9
12	Margo Anderson, The Census and the Federal Statistical System: Historical Perspectives , 631 Annals of Am. Acad. of Poli. & Soc. Sci. 152 (2010).....	6
13	The Declaration of Independence (1776)	5
14	The Federalist No. 36 (Hamilton) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961)	3, 8
15	The Federalist No. 54 (Madison) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961)	5
16	1 Samuel Johnson, A Dictionary of the English Language (4th rev. ed. 1773)	7
17	Benjamin B. Kendrick, The Journal of the Joint Committee of Fifteen on Reconstruction, 39th Congress, 1865-1867 (1914).....	12
18	James Madison, Census (Feb. 2, 1790), in 13 The Papers of James Madison (Charles F. Hobson & Robert A. Rutland eds., 1981)	7
19	Jack N. Rakove, Original Meanings: Politics and Ideas in the Making of the Constitution (1996).....	5
20	2 Joseph Story, Commentaries on the Constitution (1833)	8
21	Gordon S. Wood, The Creation of the American Republic 1776-1787 (2d ed. 1998).....	6
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

INTEREST OF *AMICI CURIAE*¹

Amici curiae are members of Congress who have a strong interest in ensuring that the federal government respects its constitutional duty to count all persons living in the United States, citizen and noncitizen alike. As members of Congress, amici know that Census data is used to make critically important decisions, including regarding how representatives are apportioned in Congress; how Electoral College votes are distributed amongst the states; how state, local, and congressional districts are drawn; and how billions of dollars of federal funds are allocated to local communities. Amici also appreciate that failing to count all persons in the United States in apportioning representatives to Congress—as our Constitution requires—would be enormously damaging, and the consequences of an unfair, inaccurate count would endure for at least the next ten years, and possibly much longer. Amici thus have a strong interest in this case.

A full listing of amici appears in the Appendix.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Census is the cornerstone of our democracy. To ensure equal representation for all, the Constitution, through both Article I, Section 2 and the Fourteenth Amendment, explicitly requires the federal government to accurately conduct an “actual Enumeration” of the people for the purpose of apportioning representatives to Congress. U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 3. This critical, all-inclusive constitutional language places a clear duty on the federal government to count the “whole number of persons in each State.” U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 2. And, consistent with that constitutional requirement, for more than “two centuries,” “[t]he Census Bureau has always attempted to count every person residing in a state on census day, and the ¹ No person or entity other than amici and their counsel assisted in or made a monetary contribution to the preparation or submission of this brief.

1 population base for purposes of apportionment has always included all persons, including aliens
2 both lawfully and unlawfully within our borders.” Fed’n for Am. Immigration Reform v.
3 Klutznick, 486 F. Supp. 564, 576 (D.D.C. 1980) (three-judge court).
4

5 On July 21, 2020, President Trump issued a memorandum that broke with this long-
6 standing historical practice and flouted the Constitution’s explicit mandate by establishing a
7 “policy of the United States to exclude from the apportionment base aliens who are not in a
8 lawful immigration status.” Memorandum on Excluding Illegal Aliens From the Apportionment
9 Base Following the 2020 Census, 85 Fed. Reg. 44,679, 44,680 (July 21, 2020). The President’s 10 policy of refusing to count undocumented immigrants in the apportionment base is blatantly
11 unconstitutional.
12

13 The Constitution’s text and history establish that the federal government must count all
14 people living in the United States for the purpose of apportioning representatives to Congress,
15 whether they are citizens or noncitizens, whether they were born in the United States or in a 16 distant part of the world. It does not give the President the power to pick and choose among the 17 people who live in the United States and decide that some people should be excluded from the 18 apportionment base because of their immigration status. Quite simply, the federal government
19 may not exclude persons who live in the United States from the constitutionally mandated census
20 count used to apportion representatives to Congress simply on the ground that they are 21 undocumented immigrants.
22
23

24 The constitutional imperative that there be an “actual Enumeration,” U.S. Const. art. I,
25 § 2, cl. 3, of the entire people reflects the Framers’ conclusion—first at the nation’s Framing
26 more than two centuries ago and then again in the aftermath of our nation’s bloody civil war—
27 that total population is the “natural & precise measure of Representation,” 1 The Records of the 28

1 Federal Convention of 1787, at 605 (Max Farrand ed., 1911) (hereinafter “Farrand’s Records”),
2 and “the only true, practical, and safe republican principle,” Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess.
3 2767 (1866). “Numbers, not voters; numbers, not property; this is the theory of the 4 Constitution.” Id. “As the Framers of the Constitution and the Fourteenth Amendment
5 comprehended, representatives serve all residents.” Evenwel v. Abbott, 136 S. Ct. 1120, 1132
6 (2016). The Constitution draws no distinction between citizens and noncitizens, but rather 7 requires that the “whole immigrant population should be numbered with the people and counted
8 as part of them.” Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 432 (1866). It imposes a constitutional 9 duty on the federal government to conduct a complete and accurate count of everyone in order to 10 realize the “Constitution’s plain objective of making equal representation for equal numbers of 11 people the fundamental goal for the House of Representatives.” Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S.
12 1, 18 (1964). By treating undocumented immigrants as non-persons, the President runs afoul of 13 the basic constitutional rule that our system of political representation depends on a count of the 14 entire populace.
15
16
17

18 Our founding principles recognize the necessity of preventing political manipulation of 19 the Census and our democracy. The Framers knew that “those who have power in their hands 20 will . . . always when they can . . . increase it,” 1 Farrand’s Records, supra, at 578, and they 21 enshrined the requirement that all persons be counted directly into the Constitution to “shut[] the 22 door to partiality or oppression,” The Federalist No. 36, at 220 (Hamilton) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 23 1961), and prevent the government from using “a mode” of taking the census “as will defeat the 24 object[] and perpetuate the inequality,” 1 Farrand’s Records, supra, at 571. The President’s 25 effort to flout the Constitution’s requirement to count all persons, citizen and noncitizen alike, in 26
27
28

1 the apportionment base is exactly the kind of manipulation of the rules of our democracy that the 2 Framers sought to prevent.

3 ARGUMENT

4 I. The Constitution’s Founders Established Total Population as the Standard for 5 Apportioning Representatives to Congress in Order to Guarantee Equal 6 Representation for Equal Numbers of People.

7 In order to ensure that “the foundations of this government should be laid on the broad 8 basis of the people,” 4 The Debates in the Several State Conventions on the Adoption of the 9 Federal Constitution 21 (Jonathan Elliot ed., 1836) (hereinafter “Elliot’s Debates”), Article I,
 10 Section 2 provides that the “House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen
 11 every second Year by the People of the several States” and that “[r]epresentatives . . . shall be 12 apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to 13 their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free
 14 Persons, . . . and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons.” U.S. Const. art. I,
 15 § 2, cl. 1, 3. To ensure a proper count of the nation’s total population, Article I, Section 2
 16 requires that an “actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of 17 the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such 18 Manner as they shall by Law direct.” Id.

19 In choosing the total population standard, our Constitution’s eighteenth-century Framers 20 decreed “that as all authority was derived from the people, equal numbers of people ought to 21 have an equal no. of representatives.” 1 Farrand’s Records, supra, at 179 (James Wilson).
 22 Determining representation in Congress based on a count of all persons reflected that “every 23 individual of the community at large has an equal right to the protection of government.” Id. at 24 473; id. at 477 (“[T]he people shd. be repre[se]nted in proportion to [their] numbers, the people
 25 then will be free.”); Evenwel, 136 S. Ct. at 1129 (explaining that “the principle of 26
 27
 28

1 representational equality figured prominently in the decision to count people, whether or not they
2 qualify as voters”).

3 Article I, Section 2’s requirement that members of Congress be chosen by the people
4 from districts “founded on the aggregate number of inhabitants,” The Federalist No. 54, supra, at 5 338 (Madison), included both citizens who enjoyed the right to vote as well as those who lacked
6 access to the ballot. “The framers were aware that this apportionment and representation base
7 would include categories of persons who were ineligible to vote—women, children, bound
8 servants, convicts, the insane, and, at a later time, aliens. Nevertheless, they declared that 9 government should represent all the people.” Garza v. County of Los Angeles, 918 F.2d 763,
10 774 (9th Cir. 1990); see Fed’n for Am. Immigration Reform, 486 F. Supp. at 576 (“The Framers
11 must have been aware that th[eir] choice of words would include women, children, bound
12 servants, convicts, the insane and aliens, since the same article of the Constitution grants
13 Congress the power ‘to establish a uniform rule of naturalization.’” (quoting U.S. Const. art. I, 14 § 8, cl. 4)).

15
16
17
18 Ensuring representation for all had deep roots in America’s bid for independence from 19 England. The Framers were familiar with what James Madison called the “vicious 20 representation in G. B.,” 1 Farrand’s Records, supra, at 464, in which “so many members were 21 elected by a handful of easily managed voters in ‘pocket’ and ‘rotten’ boroughs, while populous
22 towns went grossly underrepresented or not represented at all[.]” Jack N. Rakove, Original
23 Meanings: Politics and Ideas in the Making of the Constitution 210 (1996). The Declaration of 24 Independence charged that King George III had forced the colonists to “relinquish the right of 25 Representation in the Legislature, a right inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only.”
26 The Declaration of Independence para. 5 (1776). Having seen the political system manipulated
27
28

1 for partisan ends in England, the Framers strove to design a system that would reflect the
2 principle that a “free and equal representation is the best, if not the only foundation upon which a
3 free government can be built.” 2 Elliot’s Debates at 25. “More than anything else this equality
4 would prevent the ‘unfair, partial, and corrupt elections’ and the ‘monstrous irregularity’ of the 5 English representational system” Gordon S. Wood, The Creation of the American Republic
6 1776-1787, at 170 (2d ed. 1998).

8 To achieve these goals, the Framers imposed on the federal government a duty to conduct
9 a complete and accurate count of all people residing in the nation for the purpose of apportioning
10 representatives to Congress, creating a structural protection for equal representation. This was a 11 revolutionary undertaking. “While other nations had attempted population counts, none had 12 made the count itself an important method of maintaining democracy by mandating it through a 13 founding document.” Utah v. Evans, 536 U.S. 452, 510 (2002) (Thomas, J., concurring in part 14 and dissenting in part); Margo Anderson, The Census and the Federal Statistical System:
15 Historical Perspectives, 631 Annals of Am. Acad. of Poli. & Soc. Sci. 152, 154 (2010) (“With 16 th[e Census Clause’s] words, the United States became the first nation in the history of the world
17 to take a population census and use it to allocate seats in a national assembly according to 18 population.”). Thus, at a time when “democratic self-government existed almost nowhere on 19 earth,” Akhil Reed Amar, America’s Constitution: A Biography 8 (2005), the Framers made the 20 Census the cornerstone of the democratic system of government they created.

24 The text of Article I, Section 2 provided a “conjectural ratio” for the apportionment of 25 representatives “to prevail in the outset,” but the Framers refused to permit guesswork to be used
26 going forward. 1 Farrand’s Records, supra, at 578; Evans, 536 U.S. at 475 (“[T]he original
27 allocation of seats in the House was based on a kind of ‘conjectur[e],’ in contrast to the 28

1 deliberately taken count that was ordered for the future.” (quoting 1 Farrand’s Records, supra, at 2 578-79)). As George Mason argued, “a Revision from time to time according to some
3 permanent & precise standard” was “essential to [the] fair representation required in the 1st.
4 branch.” 1 Farrand’s Records, supra, at 578. While the Framers did not prescribe a “detailed 5 census methodology,” Evans, 536 U.S. at 479, they established a firm rule that the political 6 branches cannot vary: all persons must be counted, regardless of where they are from.
7

8 Wary that those in power might try to undermine the promise of equal representation for 9 all, the Framers insisted on an “actual Enumeration”—a national count of all inhabitants—once
10 every ten years. As Founding-era dictionaries make clear, “an ‘enumeration’ requires an actual 11 counting.” Dep’t of Commerce v. U.S. House of Representatives, 525 U.S. 316, 346 (1999)
12 (Scalia, J., concurring in part) (collecting dictionary definitions); Evans, 536 U.S. at 475 (“Late-13 18th-century dictionaries define the word simply as an ‘act of numbering or counting over[.]’” 14 (quoting 1 Samuel Johnson, A Dictionary of the English Language 658 (4th rev. ed. 1773))). As 15 James Madison observed during debates over the First Census Act, while “there will be more
16 difficulty attendant on . . . taking the census, in the way required by the [C]onstitution,” a count
17 of all persons would provide an “exact number” rather than “assertions and conjectures[.]”
18 James Madison, Census (Feb. 2, 1790), in 13 The Papers of James Madison 15-16 (Charles F.
19 Hobson & Robert A. Rutland eds., 1981).
20
21

22 Over the course of the Convention, the Framers rejected other, more-restrictive
23 provisions for apportioning representatives in favor of a rule counting all individuals. During the 24 debates over Article I, § 2, Pierce Butler urged a rule of representation based on wealth or 25 property, claiming that “property was the only just measure of representation” and the “great 26 object of Govern^t.” 1 Farrand’s Records, supra, at 542. Others agreed that “ye. number of 27
28

1 inhabitants was not the proper index of ability & wealth; that property was the primary object of
2 Society” and urged that “in fixing a ratio this ought not to be excluded from the estimate.” Id. at
3 541 (Rufus King). These proposals to depart from the rule of equal representation for equal
4 numbers of people were rejected. The Framers overwhelmingly concluded that “[t]he number of 5 inhabitants” was the “only just & practicable rule.” Id. at 542 (Charles Pinckney); see also id. at 6 587 (urging “propriety of establishing numbers as the rule” (Nathaniel Ghorum)). “[N]umbers”
7 in other words, “were surely the natural & precise measure of Representation.” Id. at 605 (James 8 Wilson).

9
10 By writing the Census directly into the Constitution, the Framers sought to prevent 11 political manipulation of our democracy. As the debates in the Constitutional Convention over 12 the Census Clause reflect, the Framers understood that “those who have power in their hands will 13 not give it up while they can retain it. On the [c]ontrary we know they will always when they 14 can rather increase it.” Id. at 578; Evans, 536 U.S. at 500 (Thomas, J., concurring in part and 15 dissenting in part) (observing that “[d]ebate about apportionment and the census . . . focused for 16 the most part on creating a standard that would limit political chicanery”). The Framers’
17 decision to mandate a national count of all inhabitants every ten years to ensure equal 18 representation for all persons “had the recommendation of great simplicity and uniformity in its 19 operation, of being generally acceptable to the people, and of being less liable to fraud and 20 evasion, than any other, which could be devised.” 2 Joseph Story, Commentaries on the 21 Constitution § 633, at 107 (1833). As Alexander Hamilton emphasized, “[a]n actual census or 22 enumeration of the people must furnish the rule, a circumstance which effectually shuts the door
23 to partiality or oppression.” The Federalist No. 36, supra, at 220 (Hamilton).

1 During the debate about the Census Clause at the Constitutional Convention, both
 2 supporters and opponents recognized that a fixed constitutional standard would limit
 3 opportunities for manipulation of our representative democracy. Gouverneur Morris opposed the 4 Census Clause as “fettering the Legislature too much,” but he recognized that if the mode for 5 taking the Census was “unfixt the Legislature may use such a mode as will defeat the object[]
 6 and perpetuate the inequality.” 1 Farrand’s Records, supra, at 571. In response, Edmund
 7 Randolph pointed out that “if the danger suggested by Mr. Govr. Morris be real, of advantage
 8 being taken of the Legislature in pressing moments, it was an additional reason, for tying their 9 hands in such a manner that they could not sacrifice their trust to momentary considerations.” Id.
 10 at 580. This argument carried the day, and the Framers concluded that “the periods & the rule of 11 revising the Representation ought to be fixt by the Constitution.” Id. at 582.

14 The Constitution’s rule that representatives would be apportioned based on an “actual 15 Enumeration” of the people, however, was undercut by the Three-Fifths Clause, which provided
 16 that, for the purpose of determining representation in Congress, enslaved persons would be 17 counted as three-fifths of a person. “The more slaves the Deep South could import from the 18 African continent—innocents born in freedom and kidnapped across an ocean to be sold on 19 auction blocks—the more seats it would earn in the American Congress.” Amar, supra, at 90.
 20 During the debates at the Convention, Gouverneur Morris and others argued strenuously against 21 the adoption of the Three-Fifths Clause, pointedly asking “[u]pon what principle is it that the 22 slaves shall be computed in the representation? Are they men? Then make them Citizens & let 23 them vote? Are they property? Why then is no other property included?” 2 Farrand’s Records,
 24 supra, at 222. The upshot of the Clause was that “the inhabitant of Georgia and S. C. who goes
 25 to the coast of Africa, and . . . tears away his fellow creatures from their dearest connections &
 26
 27
 28

1 dam(n)s them to the most cruel bondages, shall have more votes in a Govt. instituted for
 2 protection of the rights of mankind.” Id. Despite these arguments, the Convention approved the 3 Three-Fifths Clause. Nearly 80 years later, following a bloody civil war fought over our nation’s 4 original sin of slavery, the Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment would revisit the 5 Constitution’s system of representation in the wake of emancipation and abolition, as the next
 6 Section discusses.

8 II. The Fourteenth Amendment Reaffirmed the Total Population Standard in Order to 9 Ensure Equal Representation for Equal Numbers of People.

10 With the adoption of Section 2 of the Fourteenth Amendment, which provides that 11 “Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective 12 numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed,” U.S.
 13 Const. amend. XIV, § 2, the Founding generation’s commitment to equal representation for all as 14 determined by a national count of all persons was finally realized. Yet it took seven months of 15 heated debate for this guarantee of equal representation for all persons to emerge. During the 16 debates over the Fourteenth Amendment, many in Congress sought a drastic change in our 17 constitutional principles of equal representation, arguing that only citizens or voters should be 18 counted in determining representation. The Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment decisively 19 rejected those arguments and reaffirmed total population as the Constitution’s basis for 20 representation. Evenwel, 136 S. Ct. at 1128. As Jacob Howard explained in introducing the 21 Fourteenth Amendment, “numbers,” that is, total population, is “the most just and satisfactory
 22 basis, and this is the principle upon which the Constitution itself was originally framed, that the 23 basis of representation should depend upon numbers; and such . . . is the safest and most secure
 24 principle upon which the Government can rest. Numbers, not voters; numbers, not property; this 25 is the theory of the Constitution.” Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 2767 (1866).

1 When the 39th Congress met in December 1865, questions of representation were front
2 and center. With the Three-Fifths Clause a nullity, the Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment
3 were concerned that formerly enslaved people would now be counted as full persons, giving the 4 Southern states far more representation in Congress and in the Electoral College than they had
5 before they seceded from the Union. See, e.g., id. at 357 (1866) (“Shall the death of slavery add
6 two fifths to the entire power which slavery had when slavery was living?”). As the Joint
7 Committee on Reconstruction, which was tasked with writing the Fourteenth Amendment,
8 explained, “[t]he increase of representation necessarily resulting from the abolition of slavery
9 was considered the most important element in the questions arising out of the changed condition
10 of affairs, and the necessity for some fundamental action in this regard seemed imperative.”
11 Report of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction at the First Session Thirty-Ninth Congress xiii
12 (1866).

15 Even before the Joint Committee began its work, members of Congress proposed 16 constitutional amendments aimed at changing the Constitution’s basis of representation. On 17 December 5, 1865, Rep. Thaddeus Stevens introduced an amendment, which provided that 18 “[r]epresentatives shall be apportioned among the States . . . according to their respective legal 19 voters” and required Congress to provide a “true census of the legal voters.” Cong. Globe, 39th
20 Cong., 1st Sess. 10 (1865). Stevens’s proposed amendment, as well as other similar proposals, 21 met fierce objection. On January 8, 1866, Rep. James Blaine explained that “population is the 22 true basis of representation; for women, children, and other non-voting classes may have as vital
23 an interest in the legislation of the country as those who actually deposit the ballot.” Id. at 141
24 (1866). Stripping non-voters of their right to the representation guaranteed by the Constitution,
25 Blaine argued, would lead to “gross inequalities of representation” in “the loyal States.” Id.
26
27
28

1 Rather than changing the Constitution’s system of representation, Blaine preferred a targeted
2 amendment reducing congressional representation in states that denied the right to vote on 3 account of race.

4
5 On the following day, January 9, the Joint Committee convened to consider proposed 6 constitutional amendments. Rep. Stevens immediately proposed the same amendment he had 7 proposed in the House. See Benjamin B. Kendrick, The Journal of the Joint Committee of 8 Fifteen on Reconstruction, 39th Congress, 1865-1867, at 41 (1914). Several days later, the 9 Committee, by a vote of 8-6, voted down a resolution that proposed that “representatives should 10 be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers of legal voters.”
11 Id. at 45. On January 16, the Joint Committee approved a constitutional amendment that 12 reaffirmed Article I’s mandate that representation be apportioned “according to their respective 13 numbers, counting the whole numbers of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed” and 14 added a proviso that “whenever the elective franchise shall be denied or abridged in any State on 15 account of race or color, all persons of such race or color shall be excluded from the basis of 16 representation.” Id. at 51-52, 53. Although the amendment initially provided for basing
17 representation on the “whole number of citizens of the United States in each State,” id. at 50, the 18 Joint Committee overwhelmingly voted to change this language to conform to the Constitution’s
19 language requiring the counting of all persons, citizens and non-citizens alike. Id. at 52; see also 20 Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 359 (1866) (explaining Committee’s amendment from 21 counting “citizens” to counting “persons” because “[p]ersons,’ and not ‘citizens,’ have always 22 constituted the basis” (Rep. Roscoe Conkling)).

26 When the Joint Committee’s amendment was debated before the House, some objected to 27 basing representation on total population. Rep. Godlove Orth insisted that “the true principle of 28

1 representation in Congress is that voters alone should form the basis, and that each voter should
2 have equal political weight in our Government.” Id. at 380; see also id. at 379 (insisting that
3 “those who are authorized to vote, who elect Representatives to this House, and they alone, shall
4 constitute the basis of representation” (Rep. Ithamar Sloan)); id. at 404 (urging an amendment
5 that “representation shall be based on citizens of the United States who may be male adult
6 voters” so that “every voter should be equal in political power all over the Union” (Rep. William
7 Lawrence)). But as the Supreme Court has recognized, “[v]oter-based apportionment proponents
8 encountered fierce resistance Much of the opposition was grounded in the principle of 9 representational equality.” Evenwel, 136 S. Ct. at 1128. Proponents of the amendment in the 10 House argued that such a change in our Constitution’s system of representation would be “an 11 abandonment of one of the oldest and safest landmarks of the Constitution” and would 12 “introduce[] a new principle in our Government, whose evil tendency and results no man can 13 measure to-day.” Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess. 377 (1866) (Rep. James Blaine). Instead,
14 the Reconstruction Framers insisted on “leav[ing] the primary basis of representation where it
15 was placed by our fathers, the whole body of the people.” Id. at 385 (Rep. Elihu Baker).

16
17
18
19 Particularly relevant here, Rep. John Bingham argued that it would be unwise to “strike 20 from the basis of representation the entire immigrant population not naturalized,” observing that 21 “[u]nder the Constitution as it now is and as it always has been, the entire immigrant population
22 of this country is included in the basis of representation.” Id. at 432. In his view, the “whole
23 immigrant population should be numbered with the people and counted as part of them.” Id.; see 24 also id. at 411 (arguing that representation based on number of voters “takes from the basis of 25 representation all unnaturalized foreigners” (Rep. Burton Cook)). In addition, Rep. Roscoe
26 Conkling emphasized that counting only voters in determining representation “would shut out
27
28

1 four fifths of the citizens of the country—women and children, who are citizens, who are taxed,
2 and who are, and always have been, represented,” id. at 358, resulting in some regions of the 3 country receiving more representation than others. Id. at 411 (observing that “the voters of the 4 country are unequally distributed” (Rep. Burton Cook)); see also id. at 434 (“[W]hat becomes of 5 that large class of non-voting tax-payers that are found in every section? Are they in no manner
6 to be represented? They certainly should be enumerated in making up the whole number of 7 those entitled to a representative.” (Rep. Hamilton Ward)).

9 On January 31, 1866, the House of Representatives approved the amendment by a vote of 10 120-46, and sent the measure to the Senate. Debate in the Senate, as it had in the House, focused
11 on the question whether the Constitution’s system of representation should be based on total
12 population or on voting population. Supporters of the amendment urged that representation 13 should be based “on the largest basis of population, counting every man, woman, and child,” id.
14 at 1280, explaining that “[t]he principle of the Constitution, . . . is that it shall be founded on 15 population; that the people who are voters, . . . are not the whole people of a State; . . . [W]e are 16 attached to that idea, that the whole population is represented; that although all do not vote, yet
17 all are heard. That is the idea of the Constitution.” Id. at 705 (Sen. William Fessenden). The 18 amendment’s proponents refused to “throw[] out of the basis at least two and a half millions of 19 unnaturalized foreign-born men and women,” id. at 1256 (Sen. Henry Wilson), insisting that “[a] 20 community may be represented, every man in the community may be represented, and every 21 woman and child in the community may be represented, and yet not every man twenty-one years
22 of age be a voter.” Id. at 1279-80 (Sen. William Fessenden). As in the House, opponents of the 23 amendment urged a change to a voter basis of representation, claiming that the “representative
24 system is the agent of legal voters.” Id. at 1229 (Sen. Charles Sumner). Ultimately, for other 25
26
27
28

1 reasons, the amendment failed to garner a 2/3 super-majority. On March 9, 1866, a number of
2 Radical Republicans, led by Senator Charles Sumner, joined with Democrats to prevent approval
3 of the amendment.

4
5 In April 1866, the Joint Committee approved and sent to Congress a new proposed
6 amendment—which would become the Fourteenth Amendment—containing provisions
7 guaranteeing individual rights and rules for apportioning representation in Congress. This new 8 amendment reaffirmed total population as the basis for representation and added a penalty
9 provision reducing representation in states that denied African Americans the right to vote. With 10 this round of debates, only the Senate engaged in extended discussion of the Constitution’s
11 system of equal representation. The House, which had lengthy debates on total population as the 12 Constitution’s basis of representation only months earlier, did not debate these matters again.

13
14 In the Senate debates, Senator Jacob Howard explained that the Fourteenth Amendment’s
15 “basis of representation is numbers, whether the numbers be white or black,” id. at 2766, calling
16 representation in accordance with total population “the only true, practical, and safe republican
17 principle,” id. at 2767. Opponents of the Fourteenth Amendment urged that only “the voting
18 population of the country should be represented,” insisting on a change in the Constitution’s
19 system of representation so that “voters should have an equal voice.” Id. at 2942, 2944 (Sen.
20 James Doolittle). The Framers of the Fourteenth Amendment rejected such efforts to eliminate 21 the Constitution’s guarantee of equal representation for equal numbers of people. As Senator
22 Luke Poland argued, the Constitution’s “existing basis is the only true one, the only one
23 consistent with the true idea of a representative republican government. . . . All the people, or all
24 the members of a State or community, are equally entitled to protection; they are all subject to its 25 laws; they must all share its burdens, and they are all interested in its legislation and 26
27
28

1 government.” Id. at 2962; see also id. at 2987 (describing proposal to change basis of
 2 representation from total population to voting population as “a blow which strikes the two 3 million one hundred thousand unnaturalized foreigners who are now counted in the basis of 4 representation from that basis”). By a 31-7 vote, Senator Doolittle’s proposals to base
 5 representation on the number of voters were rejected. Id. at 2986, 2991.

7 As these debates reflect, the Fourteenth Amendment featured a great debate over the 8 nature of representation and democracy. Following more than seven months of debate in 9 Congress, Congress adopted the Fourteenth Amendment, insisting that total population, not voter
 10 population, was the basis for our Constitution’s system of representation. The Fourteenth
 11 Amendment, which was approved by the people and became a part of the Constitution in 1868,
 12 reaffirmed that our Constitution’s system of equal representation for all depends on a count of 13 the nation’s entire population, including noncitizens. As this history shows, the purpose of the 14 Census required by the Constitution has never been to count just citizens, but rather to count “the 15 whole body of the people.” Id. at 385.

18 III. The President May Not Refuse to Count Persons Living in the United States Simply 19 Because of Their Immigration Status.

20 President Trump’s memorandum claims that the “Constitution does not specifically 21 define which persons must be included in the apportionment base,” 85 Fed. Reg. at 44,679, but 22 ignores that the Constitution explicitly mandates a count of the “whole number of persons” in the 23 United States for purposes of apportioning representatives to Congress. It is plain that 24 undocumented immigrants who live in the United States are among the “whole number of 25 persons” the Constitution requires the federal government to count in the apportionment base.
 26 “Whatever his status under the immigration laws, an alien is surely a ‘person’ in any ordinary
 27 sense of that term.” Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202, 210 (1982). As Plyler recognized, “[t]hat a 28

1 person’s initial entry into a State, or into the United States, was unlawful, and that he may for
2 that reason be expelled, cannot negate the simple fact of his presence within the State’s territorial
3 perimeter.” Id. at 215; Fed’n for Am. Immigration Reform, 486 F. Supp. at 576 (“The language
4 of the Constitution is not ambiguous. It requires the counting of the ‘whole number of persons’
5 for apportionment purposes, and while illegal aliens were not a component of the population at 6 the time the Constitution was adopted, they are clearly ‘persons.’”).

8 The presidential policy at issue here thus cannot be squared with the Constitution’s text
9 and history, which reflect that “[u]nder the Constitution as it now is and as it always has been,
10 the entire immigrant population of this country is included in the basis of representation” and 11 “numbered with the people and counted as part of them.” Cong. Globe, 39th Cong., 1st Sess.
12 432 (1866). Excluding undocumented immigrants from the constitutionally mandated 13 apportionment count and stripping them of representation in Congress would undermine our 14 constitutional promises of equality and democracy, which proceed from the fundamental idea
15 that all persons residing in the United States—no matter their citizenship status or where they 16 come from—deserve to be represented in the halls of Congress. “As the Framers of the 17 Constitution and the Fourteenth Amendment comprehended, representatives serve all residents,
18 not just those eligible or registered to vote,” and our system of “total-population apportionment
19 promotes equitable and effective representation.” Evenwel, 136 S. Ct. at 1132. Because the 20 President’s policy of excluding undocumented immigrants from the apportionment base
21 contravenes the requirement to count all persons in apportioning representatives to Congress, it is 22 unconstitutional.
23
24
25
26
27
28

1 CONCLUSION

2 For the foregoing reasons, the plaintiffs’ motions for partial summary judgment should be
3 granted.

4 Dated: September 1, 2020

5 Respectfully submitted,

6 /s/ Elizabeth B. Wydra
7 Elizabeth B. Wydra

8 Elizabeth B. Wydra
9 Brianne J. Gorod
10 David H. Gans
11 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCOUNTABILITY CENTER
12 1200 18th Street, N.W., Suite 501
13 Washington, D.C. 20036
14 (202) 296-6889
15 elizabeth@theusconstitution.org

16 Counsel for Amici Curiae

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

APPENDIX – LIST OF AMICI

Schatz, Brian
Senator of Hawaii

Blumenthal, Richard
Senator of Connecticut

Booker, Cory A.
Senator of New Jersey

Brown, Sherrod
Senator of Ohio

Feinstein, Dianne
Senator of California

Hirono, Mazie K.
Senator of Hawaii

Merkley, Jeffrey A.
Senator of Oregon

Warren, Elizabeth
Senator of Massachusetts

Wyden, Ron
Senator of Oregon

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that on September 1, 2020, the foregoing document was filed with the Clerk of the Court, using the CM/ECF system, causing it to be served on all counsel of record.

Dated: September 1, 2020

/s/ Elizabeth B. Wydra
Elizabeth B. Wydra
Counsel for Amici Curiae