REPLY IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANTS’
 MOTION TO MODIFY THIS COURT’S JUNE 26, 2018 ORDER AND PROCEED IMMEDIATELY WITH REMEDIAL PHASE

The Defendants agree that it would be far preferable for the political actors in Virginia to enact a new redistricting plan that remedies the serious constitutional violations identified in this Court’s June 26, 2018 order and opinion. We also acknowledge that doing so would inevitably take some amount of time. That is why, notwithstanding the various logistical challenges identified in the brief in support of our motion, the Defendants did not oppose (and indeed supported) giving the political actors time to attempt to develop a constitutional plan. And that is why our basic submission is that the Court should take immediate steps to begin the remedial phase, not that the Court should necessarily abandon all hope that the political actors will reach a solution before October 30.

But, as our motion demonstrates, things have changed since this Court’s June 26, 2018 order. For almost two months, the Virginia General Assembly did not convene on its own volition. And when the Governor convened a special session for the express purpose of considering redistricting, the General Assembly held a one-day session, during which only one plan was offered, and then promptly adjourned without setting a date to reconvene.

The response states that the House Committee on Privileges and Elections “will consider whether to approve [the only bill that has yet been offered] by on or about September 27, 2018” and that the “House leadership” will propose “its [own] plan . . . around that time.” Deft.-Intervenors’ Resp. in Opp. to Mot. to Modify this Court’s June 26, 2018 Order at 5, 7 (ECF No. 260). The response cites no source—record or otherwise—for those statements and the only exhibit attached to the response (a letter from the Speaker to the Governor) makes no mention of such a plan. The response also does not identify when that September 27 date was set or explain why it does not appear to have been publicly announced until after the Intervenor-Defendants filed their response to our recent motion.<sup>1</sup> The response also declines to “identify a date” (much less a deadline) for any “floor votes”, id. at 8, or even to squarely commit that the full House will come back into session at any point before October 30.

Given the events of the last few months, there is no reason for confidence that Virginia’s political actors will enact a constitutional redistricting plan before October 30. As we explained in our brief in support of our motion, delaying the start of a judicial redistricting process until after that date will certainly disrupt Virginia’s 2019 election cycle. And because the ultimate remedial order will itself be appealable to the Supreme Court,<sup>2</sup> it also raises the specter that Virginia’s last set of elections before the next round of constitutionally mandated redistricting will be held under a map that this Court has already held to be unconstitutional. See Common Cause v. Rucho, No. 1:16-CV-1026, 2018 WL 4214334, at *1 (M.D. N.C. Sept. 4, 2018) (per curiam) (declining to enjoin use of an unconstitutional map during the upcoming November 6, 2018 general election in part because “imposing a new schedule for North Carolina’s congressional elections would, at this late juncture, unduly interfere with the State’s electoral machinery and likely confuse voters and depress turnout”). For that reason, “the public interest is served by having the redrawn districts before the Supreme Court of the United States when it considers the merits of this case.” Order of Aug. 30, 2018, at 3 (Payne, J., concurring) (ECF No. 256).

The motion to modify this court’s June 26, 2018 order and proceed immediately with the remedial phase should be granted. Because the proposed schedule set forth in the Plaintiffs’ response would substantially address the concerns raised in our motion, we agree that the Court should move swiftly to appoint a special master and set a remedial phase under the suggested terms. Pls.’ Resp. to Mot. to Modify this Court’s June 26, 2018 Order and Proceed Immediately with Remedial Phase at 2 (ECF No. 261).
